and taxation for non-EU citizens

CLIENT GUIDE

Updated 25 August 2026

For non-EU citizens, internationally mobile families and business owners

BEFORE COMMITTING TO A ROUTE Confirm nationality, intended activity, salary / business eligibility, family position, funding and tax residence. A company-registration certificate does not itself confer a right to live or work in Slovakia.

1. Main routes to Slovak residence

The correct route depends on nationality, intended activity, qualifications, salary or business plan, family relationships, funding and whether the person will work locally.

Employment and high-skilled routes

Employment residence and EU Blue Card routes are available. Labour-market confirmation, salary and qualifications depend on the permit category.

Employment / EU Blue

Card

Employment residence and EU Blue Card

routes are available. Labour-market confirmation, salary and qualifications depend on t

Permission linked to the qualifying job / route and its conditions.

Business / self-

employment residence

Temporary residence for business may be available to entrepreneurs and company representatives who satisfy the statutory purp

Permission linked to the approved business / self-employed activity.

Family / study Documented relationship or eligible study programme; financial and insurance conditions may apply.

Permission depends on sponsor /

programme and may have work limits.

OWNER-MANAGED COMPANY Forming a Slovak company does not automatically allow its shareholder or director to work in Slovakia. The immigration basis must authorise the actual role and activity.

Employment / EU Blue Card

Work-route eligibility, salary thresholds and labour-market conditions should be checked immediately before application because they can change during the year.

Family and study

Family reunification and study routes are available in defined circumstances. Requirements commonly include evidence of relationship or admission, sufficient funds, insurance and accommodation. Work rights depend on the specific Slovak permission.

2. Residence without work / independent means

Slovakia does not offer a broad retirement visa solely for private wealth. A specific residence purpose is normally required.

Practical implications

- Company ownership, investments or property ownership should never be assumed to create a residence right.
 - Passive ownership should be distinguished from active management, employment or self-employment. • The permission wording and actual day-to-day activity should be reviewed before relocation. • Proof of funds, health insurance and accommodation may be required depending on the route.
- Tax residence is separate from immigration residence and requires its own analysis.

NO-WORK RESIDENCE Slovakia does not offer a broad retirement visa solely for private wealth. A specific residence purpose is normally required.

WORK RESTRICTION Passive investment should not be confused with employment, self-employment or active company management. A person carrying out work must hold an immigration basis that permits it.

Passive ownership versus active management

Holding shares as an investment Potentially possible, subject to company law, sanctions, tax and sector rules.

Receiving dividends / investment returns

Potentially possible, with local and cross-border tax consequences.

Managing daily operations Work activity; an appropriate immigration basis is normally required.

Providing services to the company Employment / self-employment activity; authorisation should be confirmed.

Drawing salary or management fees

for work

Requires immigration, payroll and tax analysis.

Long-term residence caution

Temporary residence, permanent residence, citizenship residence and tax residence are separate tests. Whether time under a particular permit counts toward a long-term objective depends on the rules in force at the relevant time.

3. Entrepreneur and founder routes

Business / self-employment residence

An s.r.o. can generally be foreign-owned, but a founder working or acting as managing director in Slovakia must ensure the residence status permits that activity.

Core planning requirements

- A credible business plan and evidence that the proposed activity is genuine and viable.
- Appropriate funding and source-of-funds documentation.
- Evidence of founder skills, qualifications or commercial track record where relevant.
- A residence permission that expressly permits the proposed founder, management or self-employed activity.

More likely to support a founder application Generally weaker case

Innovative or commercially credible venture with documented funding

Passive investment or shell company

Business plan showing market need and economic substance

Company formed only to obtain residence

Founder capability and lawful source of funds Unclear activity, funding or local economic rationale

Permit duration and limits

Founder permissions are normally conditional on continuing to satisfy the qualifying business and personal requirements.

- Material changes to the business, ownership, employer or activity can trigger a notification or new immigration application.
- Unrelated employment may require separate authorisation.
- The application evidence should be prepared before committing to relocation or local payroll.
- Passive investment should not be confused with a founder or self-employment residence route.

CONDITION OF PERMISSION A founder must comply with the conditions of the residence route actually granted.

Incorporation alone does not expand work rights.

The usual owner-managed vehicle considered in this guide is the Spoločnosť s ručením obmedzeným (s.r.o.). It has separate legal personality and shareholder liability is generally limited, subject to statutory exceptions and capital rules.

Coordinated Slovakia planning sequence

- 1 IMMIGRATION Choose a permission that authorises the intended activity.
- 2 COMPANY Design the ownership, management, capital and governance arrangements.
- 3 REGISTRATION Complete company, tax, VAT, payroll and ownership registrations.

4 REMUNERATION Model salary, dividends, pension and social-security exposure.

5 COMPLIANCE Maintain books, annual accounts, tax returns and sector licences.

SEQUENCE MATTERS Immigration, company substance, payroll and personal tax residence are legally distinct, but they interact in practice and should be planned together.

Core formation requirements

Company form Spoločnosť s ručením obmedzeným (s.r.o.)

Share capital Minimum registered capital for an s.r.o. is EUR 5,000, with minimum contribution rules for individual shareholders.

Shareholder One or more shareholders are generally possible; foreign ownership is subject to any sector-specific rules.

Management Local company-law requirements for directors / managers must be satisfied.

Registered office A valid registered office / business address in Slovakia is generally required.

Registration Complete the prescribed commercial / company register process.

Tax registrations Register for corporation tax, VAT, payroll and employer obligations where relevant.

Beneficial ownership Maintain and file beneficial-owner information where required.

Registration and ongoing obligations

1. Confirm the company form, name, founders, management and registered office.
2. Prepare and execute the constitutional / incorporation documents and contribute the required capital.
3. Complete company, tax, VAT, payroll and employer registrations where relevant.
4. Register legal and beneficial ownership information where required.
5. Maintain accounting records and prepare annual accounts / filings under local law.
6. File corporation tax, VAT, payroll and other returns and maintain sector licences where required.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP A non-EEA person can generally own a Slovak company, but ownership is separate from immigration permission. Banking, sanctions, regulated-sector and tax-residence issues may require additional review.

5. Company taxation

a Slovak resident company is generally subject to local corporation tax under the rules described below. Cross-border management, permanent establishments, transfer pricing and treaty residence require specialist analysis.

Principal company tax rates

Corporation tax 10% for taxpayers with taxable revenues up to EUR 100,000; 21% standard; 24% for taxpayers with taxable revenues above EUR 5 million

Standard VAT 23% standard from 2025 and continuing in 2026

Dividend / withholding Domestic withholding and treaty relief depend on recipient and structure.

Payroll / social security Separate employer and employee charges may apply.

Transfer pricing / cross-border Arm's-length and documentation rules can apply to related-party transactions.

Trading-profit illustration

Illustrative taxable company profit EUR 100,000

Indicative company tax EUR 21,000 standard illustration

Profit after company tax EUR 79,000 standard illustration

This simplified illustration excludes payroll taxes, VAT, withholding taxes, local taxes, incentives and cross-border adjustments. The actual taxable base can differ from accounting profit.

PLANNING POINT The headline company-tax rate is not the owner's final tax rate. Additional personal tax, social charges and withholding can arise when profits are extracted.

Company residence and management

If a Slovak company is effectively managed from another country, or a foreign company is managed from Slovakia, dual-residence, permanent-establishment and treaty issues can arise. Board process, decision-making, personnel and operating substance should match the intended structure.

6. Personal Income Tax - 2026

Slovak personal income tax uses progressive rates for employment income and special rates for certain business income. 2026 thresholds and social/health contributions should be modelled case by case.

Principal personal-tax considerations

Employment / business income Slovak personal income tax uses progressive rates for employment income and special rates for certain business income. 2

Dividends / investment income Dividend taxation depends on the year from which the underlying profit arises and the recipient's status;

withholding an

Social security Separate rules may materially affect salary / director remuneration.

Treaty relief Can affect residence, withholding and double taxation.

Annual changes Thresholds and reliefs should be reconfirmed before implementation.

The final liability depends on residence, deductions, family position, social-security classification, municipality or local taxes where relevant, and treaty relief.

2026 planning point

Personal tax thresholds and social-security rules should be confirmed for the taxpayer and payment type at the time remuneration is implemented.

PERSONAL TAX Do not use a single headline rate as a personal forecast. Residence, deductions, social contributions, family position and treaty relief can materially change the result.

Dividends and investment income

Dividend taxation depends on the year from which the underlying profit arises and the recipient's status; withholding and treaty rules should be confirmed before distribution.

Tax residence is separate from immigration

Slovak tax residence is generally based on permanent residence, home or 183-day presence, subject to treaty tie-breakers.

7. Salary, director remuneration and dividends

Owner-directors commonly extract value through salary, director remuneration, dividends, pension contributions or a combination. Each route has different company, personal-tax, payroll, social-security, cash-flow and immigration consequences.

Salary / employment remuneration

- Normally deductible for the company where commercially supportable and incurred for the business.
- Subject to payroll withholding and the applicable personal income-tax and social-security rules.
- Employer social contributions, pension and other payroll obligations may apply depending on the country and arrangement.

- A non-EEA owner must hold permission that authorises the underlying work or management activity.

Director / management remuneration

Board or management fees require separate tax and payroll analysis. The treatment can depend on whether the individual is an employee, executive director, board member or non-resident and on any applicable treaty.

Dividends

- Paid from distributable profits after company tax and subject to proper corporate approval.
- Not normally deductible in calculating company taxable profit.
- Domestic withholding tax may apply to dividends depending on recipient and structure.
- Dividend taxation depends on the year from which the underlying profit arises and the recipient's status; withholding and treaty rules should be confirmed before distribution.

- Dividends are investment returns and do not by themselves create a right to work or manage the company.

IMMIGRATION CHECK Changing the extraction method does not cure an immigration mismatch. Salary or management activity requires a permit that authorises the underlying work.

8. Combined company and shareholder illustration

This simplified example shows the company-level position before any personal tax on distribution. It is not a recommendation or a complete shareholder tax calculation.

Company taxable profit EUR 100,000

Company tax EUR 21,000 standard illustration

After-tax amount before distribution EUR 79,000 standard illustration

Personal tax on distribution Depends on residence, dividend rules, withholding and treaty relief.

Net amount personally retained Requires case-specific calculation.

EFFECTIVE RESULT The combined company-and-shareholder burden cannot be stated reliably from the company-tax rate alone. This guide therefore avoids presenting a single combined effective rate as a recommendation.

Salary versus dividend comparison

Usually deductible for the company if properly incurred.

Not normally deductible for the company.

Payroll tax and social contributions may apply. Dividend / investment-income tax and withholding may apply.

May support pension / employment contribution history.

Investment return rather than earned remuneration.

Requires work permission where the owner performs the activity.

Does not itself authorise work or management.

Must be commercially supportable. Requires distributable reserves and corporate approval.

This comparison is deliberately high-level. The appropriate mix depends on company profitability, the owner's tax residence, immigration permission, pension strategy, payroll classification, treaty relief and whether profits are retained or distributed.

9. Recommended planning sequence

The sequence matters. Incorporating first and addressing immigration or tax residence later can create a company that the founder is not legally permitted to operate in Slovakia, or can create unintended cross-border tax exposure.

1. Confirm nationality, current residence and whether an entry visa or preclearance is required for Slovakia.
2. Identify the immigration route before committing to relocation, employment or active company management.

3. Test the relevant employment, Blue Card, entrepreneur, family, study or no-work route against the actual facts.
4. Define ownership, management, registered office, capital and banking arrangements for the Spolo• nos• s ru• ením obmedzeným (s.r.o.).
5. Prepare the employment file or founder business plan, funding and source-of-funds evidence.
6. Incorporate and complete company, tax, VAT, payroll and beneficial-ownership registrations.
7. Agree a compliant salary, dividend, pension and payroll strategy with Slovak advisers.
8. Review personal and company tax residence, treaty exposure, permanent establishments and continuing obligations elsewhere.
9. Complete post-arrival residence, population/tax registration and other local formalities where required.

Documents commonly required

Immigration and personal Company and commercial

Passport and civil-status documents Constitutional / incorporation documents

Employment contract or founder-route evidence Business plan and financial forecasts

Proof of qualifications / funds / insurance Funding and source-of-funds evidence

Family, study or accommodation evidence Management, address and ownership details

Tax-residence / social-security file Tax, VAT, payroll and beneficial-owner registrations

DO NOT RELY ON INCORPORATION A company-registration certificate proves that the company exists. It does not prove that a non-EEA founder may enter Slovakia, live there, work for the company or manage it.

10. Cross-border and advisory considerations

Tax residence is separate from immigration residence a Slovak residence permit does not by itself determine tax residence. Domestic residence tests and double-tax treaties must be analysed separately.

Operating from another country a Slovak company managed from abroad can create foreign permanent-establishment, payroll, social-security, VAT and company-residence issues. The owner's home country may also tax salary, director fees, dividends or capital gains.

Remote work and foreign employers

Working physically in Slovakia for a foreign employer can create local payroll, social-security or personal-tax exposure even where the employer is abroad. Treaty day-count rules are not a universal exemption.

Regulated and professional activities

Company registration does not replace professional licences or regulatory permissions. Financial services, insurance, legal work, healthcare, recruitment, transport, food, hospitality and other regulated sectors may require separate Slovak or EU authorisation.

Questions to resolve before proceeding

- What is the applicant's nationality and current country of tax residence? • Will the person be employed in Slovakia, run a business, or remain only a passive shareholder? • Which immigration route actually authorises the intended activity? • How much funding is available and can its source be documented? • Where will company management decisions actually be taken? • Will profits be retained, paid as salary, contributed to pension arrangements or distributed as dividends? • Does the person have ongoing tax, company, social-security or estate-planning exposure elsewhere?

PROFESSIONAL REVIEW Immigration, corporate, tax, payroll, social-security and regulatory advice should be coordinated. A structure that works for tax may not satisfy immigration conditions, and a residence route may restrict the intended company role.
